Poker Dealer School of Philadelphia

Your Poker Dealer Enrollment Call Guide

Use this checklist to prepare for a conversation with Frank Tsyngauz, the school's owner and instructor. Bring your questions and leave with a clear picture of what training would look like for you.

1. Think about why you want to deal poker

Write down what you hope to accomplish in the next six to twelve months. Consider which poker rooms or shifts you'd like to pursue and whether you want to transition into casino work or build on experience you already have.

2. Take stock of your experience

Be ready to describe any poker games you know, casino or customer service experience, and skills you want to improve. Students can start with the basics and build through practice.

3. Check your schedule and commute

The program runs four weeks and includes 96 hours of instruction. Review your work and family commitments and plan your trip to 179 W Berks Street, Suite 104, Philadelphia, PA 19122. Ask about the next start date, day and evening options, attendance, and any prerequisites.

4. Bring your questions

Ask about tuition, what's included, how enrollment works, and what to expect from casino auditions. If you already deal table games, ask how your experience will help you in a live poker room.

What you'll get from training

Practice dealing Texas Hold'em, Omaha, Stud and other games with cards and chips. Work through betting procedures, pot management and table communication with direct feedback. Prepare for auditions and ask about alumni practice by appointment, résumé support and interview guidance.

What happens after the call

If the program fits your goals and schedule, Frank can explain the enrollment forms and next steps. Casinos make their own hiring decisions and may require auditions and regulatory approvals.
